Portraits of Huntington Businesses:
An Artist's Tribute

March 2–April 20, 2007

Reception: Friday March 2, 2007; 6:00-8:00 PM

Huntington Public Library is pleased to welcome Lisa Ahronee Golub's exhibit of Huntington business owners and employees in brilliant, colorful pastel portraits. You will recognize faces and places in Huntington that make life here (while eating, shopping and running around doing errands) such a pleasure. Ms. Golub captures them in their glory at work.

"My family buys tacos from Goldmine Mexican Grill in Greenlawn. The owner, Dave, is a great cook and for a long time I wanted to make a portrait of him in his colorful attire. He wears a cap backwards with bright chili peppers, a long black ponytail with multiple scrunchies, checkered black and white pants, and has useful objects protruding from his pockets. I finally asked him if he would be willing to let me take pictures of him so I could paint his portrait. Graciously he agreed!

When the art gallery curator at Huntington Public Library encouraged me to work on a new exhibit at the library, I thought of Dave, and that it would be fun to paint portraits of many more business owners. The show could benefit all of us in different ways. The business owners would be showcased. The people viewing the show would personally relate to those portrayed from Huntington, Greenlawn, and Northport. Finally, I would have many exciting paintings to work on, and I would be able to incorporate still life elements into the portrait compositions."

Lisa Ahronee Golub was born in New York City, then raised in Rome, Italy and Geneva, Switzerland, surrounded and inspired by art. She came to the U.S. to attend college at Wellesley, then moved to New York and worked in banking on Wall Street for ten years. Ms. Golub has studied art and painted throughout her life and began exhibiting in 2002. She has focused on portraits of adults, children, and animals, working primarily in pastel and oil. She also enjoys painting landscapes of places that are special to her. Color and composition are of primary importance.

Ms. Golub currently resides in Huntington with her family and pets.
